

Internships at the Walkleys & the IFJ, the start of your career in media...

Forget about doing coffee runs! Internships with the Walkley Foundation or International Federation of Journalists will thrust you onto the centre stage of Asia-Pacific journalism.

Walkleys internship

Who we are and what we do

The Walkley Foundation administers the Walkley Awards, Australia's most prestigious accolades for journalism. The foundation also organises professional development programs for journalists and other media professionals.

What you do

Interns will work on publicity and event management for a variety of projects such as the Walkley Awards, Press Freedom dinner, media forums, and journalism and PR conventions. Interns also get hands-on sub-editing experience and may help with contributions to The Walkley Magazine.

Who we need

We're after motivated, intelligent, creative and articulate journalism or communication students, preferably in their final year of study. If you are confident with an energetic attitude and can bring a variety of skills to your internship, we want you!

International Federation of Journalists internship

Who we are and what we do

The IFJ represents 600,000 journalists in 120 countries. IFJ Asia co-ordinates campaigns and projects for journalists in the region, focusing on such issues as press freedom; trade unions; gender equity and journalism ethics.

What you do

Interns will gain experience in international relations, media and human rights and the work of global union federations. Projects could include research and writing for such campaigns as human rights, journalist safety and public service broadcasting.
